Live Webinar—Rooted in Connection: A Culturally Responsive Approach to Suicide Prevention for American Indian Youth and Families

Tuesday, December 22, 2026 | 12:00-1:30 PM

Suicide prevention in American Indian and Alaska Native (AI/AN) communities begins with understanding the historical, cultural, and systemic factors that shape risk, and the cultural strengths that protect. Join us to learn how identity, connection, and belonging support well-being, and to gain practical ways to recognize distress, start the conversation, build protective relationships, and connect children, youth, and families with culturally responsive support.

Presented by: Tanya Scheidegger, LPC, Behavioral Health Director, Gerald L. Ignace Indian Health Clinic
Tanya Scheidegger is a Licensed Professional Counselor and Behavioral Health Director at the Gerald L. Ignace Indian Health Clinic in Milwaukee, an Urban Indian Health Organization. She has extensive experience in suicide prevention and culturally responsive, trauma-informed care, including serving as Project Director for SAMHSA's Native Connections initiative (2021-2025).
